Description

Triumphal arches have a long history dating all the way back to the Roman period.

The triumphal arch of Bucharest was originally constructed in wood shortly after Romania gained its independence in 1878.

Designed by Petre Antonescu (who was renowned for implementing much of the Neo-Romanian architecture throughout the city), the triumphal arch standing today was unveiled in 1936. Antonescu also designed the Bucharest City Hall, the Oprea Soare House, the Law Faculty Palace and the Student's Culture House, among other important buildings in Bucharest.
